The Examination and its Effect on School Life.

BY PROF. HAZZEL.

Of all the relics of dead formalism that have ever existed in the profession of teaching, the formal examination is probably the last, and the most lasting, if not everlasting. Of a truth, the formal examination has many warm supporters who can produce some seemingly valid argument in its favor, but to us it seems that the practice is needless, wasteful, and indefensible.

Take a school, either rural or city, for example. Here is a teacher who has worked many weeks, or perhaps months, with her boys and girls. She knows them everyone by name, their habits, who are healthful and strong, who are sickly who have the head-ache, who are quick to learn and who are slow; she knows about what answer each child will give to each question, and yet she is required to go through Planting Shade Trees.

Circular of information 17, entitled "The Planting and Care of Shade Trees," is ready for distribution by the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station. It is of interest to all persons, whether farmers or not, who wish to be successful in raising shade trees about their homes.

The illustrations show examples of trees properly and improperly cared for. The circular treats such topics as "What to Plant;" "How the Tree Grows;" "Protection Against Injuries;" "Pruning," etc. It describes twenty of the best shade trees and tells the kind of soil and treatment best suited to each.

This is the season when real estate owners should plan to beautify their property by planting trees and shrubs next spring. School Superintendents and teachers who are planning to observe Arbor Day will find this bulletin helpful. It will be sent free to all who ask for it. Send your name and address to the director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, Columbia, Missouri.
